

101115	Arabic language	(3 credit hours)	(prerequisite "101099")
---------------	------------------------	-------------------------	---------------------------------

The course aims at enabling the student to utilize the various cognitive principles of the Arabic language and their applications through traditional and contemporary texts in the fields of literature, culture, and science. It additionally serves to form a linguistic reservoir that would aid the student in the proper use of Arabic and dealing efficiently with its diverse skills. The course also introduces the most important syntactic, morphological and linguistic principles, and highlights their application in selected Arabic texts.