

101321	Modern Linguistics	(3 credit hours)	(prerequisite -)
---------------	---------------------------	-------------------------	-------------------------

The course deals with the concept of linguistics, its branches, schools, methods, history of modern linguistic studies and its relation to other sciences. It also informs students about language, its features and functions, and differentiates it from speech. The course additionally examines levels of linguistic analysis – phonology, morphology, syntax and semantics - and their applications, studying and analyzing multiple linguistic schools of thought of Arab scholars.
