

101424	Arabic Phonology	(3 credit hours)	(prerequisite -)
---------------	-------------------------	-------------------------	--------------------------

This course considers the theoretical and practical dimensions of linguistic acoustics, discussing the most important terms and in this field within the branches of phonetics and phonology. It also studies some applied topics concerning speech and articulation disorders and their treatments, children's speech acoustics acquisition, teaching speech acoustics for non-Arabic speakers, Quranic recitation, and acoustic performance related to the subjects of stress and intonation, with applications on a variety of literary and linguistic texts.