

16.3 Working with Government

Isra University, a prominent educational institution in Jordan, plays a vital role in the region's socio-economic development through its collaboration with the Government. This partnership is essential for fostering a robust educational framework, enhancing research capabilities, and promoting community engagement.

One of the primary ways Al Isra University cooperates with the Government is by aligning its academic programs with the national workforce requirements. By actively participating in government initiatives and employment strategies, the university ensures that its curricula remain relevant and responsive to the evolving needs of various sectors. This alignment benefits students by enhancing their employability and supports the Government's objective of reducing unemployment and driving economic growth.

Al-Isra University also engages in research projects addressing pressing national issues, such as sustainable development, health care, and technology innovation. These collaborations often result in valuable contributions to policy-making and the formulation of strategies that tackle societal challenges. Furthermore, the university organises conferences and workshops that bring together government officials, industry experts, and academics, fostering dialogue and disseminating knowledge that can inform government initiatives.

In terms of community service, Al-Isra University actively promotes volunteerism and outreach programs that align with government objectives. By encouraging students and faculty to participate in community development activities, the university helps bridge the gap between academic knowledge and real-world applications, thus enhancing social cohesion and contributing to the overall well-being of local communities.