Research on Poverty

Al-Isra University strengthens research collaboration with around 150 global institutions, aiming to develop research efforts in ways that positively impact both the university and the country.

Among these efforts is the engagement in research environments in low-income countries to ensure the development of both the research itself and the academic ecosystem. Examples of these countries include Iraq, Egypt, India, Tunisia, Morocco, Pakistan, Turkey, China, and Iran. All of which are part of this collaboration, as reflected in the data platform Scopus.

The university has documented seven documents related to poverty eradication, as shown in the Scopus database and in the image below. This aligns with the university's plan to support research on poverty.
